Prof. Gilbert Makes Impression Upon Adams School Directors; Candidate For Superintendent

Dean of Men at Shippensburg Normal Presents His Qualifications.

Professor Levi Gilbert, dean of men at the Cumberland Valley State Normal School at Shippensburg and a son of James Gilbert, of Table Rock, an employee of the local furniture factories, is interviewing school directors of Adams county over the week-ends and, according to reports, is making a very favorable impression in his candidacy for superintendent of Adams county public schools.

Professor Gilbert is not a stranger in Adams county schools, he having been a former teacher in the Biglerville High School. He has served the last five years on the staff of the Shippensburg State Normal School.

Directors Elect April 13

The school directors of the various towns and townships of Adams county will meet in Gettysburg April 13 to elect a county superintendent for a four year term. The superintendent elected at that time has the naming of the assistant superintendent, but Professor Gilbert has publicly announced that, if he is elected superintendent, he will ask the directors before they adjourn to designate their choice for his assistant.

"I am quite willing and ready to work with any man the directors feel is best qualified to fill the office of assistant superintendent," Professor Gilbert has told a number of directors he has impressed with his qualifications, according to information given The Times by directors.

Professor Gilbert graduated from the Shippensburg State Normal School in 1917 and from Franklin and Marshall College in 1922, finishing his work before the end of the school year. He carried off highest scholastic honors of his classes at both institutions, having been valedictorian at both Shippensburg and Franklin and Marshall.

Enlisted From Adams County
During the world war, Professor Gilbert enlisted while teaching school at Biglerville in the first flying cadet company of the United States Army from Adams county and served in eight different camps, the first being Omaha, Nebraska.

He was a star athlete at Franklin and Marshall College and was a captain of the football team there. He played two years in football games against Gettysburg College. He has had eleven years experience as a teacher in public schools, including rural schools, high schools and later at Shippensburg Normal. He is 34 years old and has a family of a wife and two children.

Professor Gilbert has many strong supporters for the position of superintendent in Adams county among prominent laymen and school directors alike.

"I am not playing politics in presenting myself for the position of superintendent of Adams county schools, because I don't know anything about the political game," Professor Gilbert is quoted as saying. "I have no word of criticism for others who are seeking the same position. If I can't sell myself to the directors on the strength of my qualifications, I don't want the job; most assuredly, I am not seeking the position by holding up the faults of others who have just as much right to present their claims to the directors as I have."

One or two others seeking the same position are reported to be "not quite as frank and open and fair in their tactics," according to several directors who have been approached by them. They are reported to be belittling the candidacy of Professor Gilbert on the ground that he does not live in Adams county at the present time. This statement is used so extensively that Professor Gilbert, upon the advice of his friends, has written the following letter to each of the directors:

Shippensburg, Penna.
Feb. 25, 1926.

My Dear Sir:

I take this means of defense to propaganda used against me as a candidate for superintendent of the schools of Adams county. The statement used is that I am not working in the county at this particular time.

NATIVE WRITES OF HONEST ABE

Martin Phillip Rindlaub, Sr., Now Residing in Wisconsin Contributes Lincoln Article to Magazine.

Martin Phillip Rindlaub, Sr., native of Gettysburg, now publisher and editor of the Grant County Witness, Platteville, Wisconsin, and member of the Kiwanis Club of the same city, contributes an interesting article on "Abraham Lincoln" in the current issue of The Kiwanis Magazine.

Mr. Rindlaub's article is an historical sketch by a Kiwanian who was a newspaper reporter at the Lincoln-Douglas debate in Freeport, Illinois, in 1858 and at the Wigwam convention in Chicago in 1860, when Lincoln was nominated for the presidency.

A portion of the article refers to Gettysburg:

Born in Gettysburg
"It is very hard in this day to realize the state of affairs that existed, for a number of years before the war, between the people of the North and the South. Anti-slavery sentiment predominated in the North and while there were many abolitionists they were regarded as disturbers and cranks. I was born and raised at Gettysburg, within ten miles of the Maryland border, and I know that a northern man was always looked upon with suspicion by the people of the South, and it was not safe for an opponent of slavery to give utterance to his sentiments south of Mason and Dixon's line."

Mr. Rindlaub's article, which is lengthy and replete with many hitherto unpublished incidents in the life of Lincoln, closes as follows:

"Each passing year serves to emphasize the fact that the memory of Abraham Lincoln has been more potent than any other influence in bringing the people of the North and the South into more peaceful and harmonious relations toward each other."

"In the language of another:

"Heroic soul, in homely garb half hid, Sincere, sagacious, melancholy, quaint, What he endured, no less than what he did, Has reared his monument and crowned him saint."

DOLLAR DAY IS SUCCESS HERE

Gettysburg merchants who participated in the annual Dollar Day sale here, held Saturday, pronounced the affair the most successful ever held. Large crowds packed each store during the day, and took advantage of the various dollar-day specials, offered by the local merchants.

One merchant said, "It is a great thing for Gettysburg and Adams county to have the merchants join in a dollar day sale and we find it to the mutual advantage of those concerned."

PLAN CONTROL OF DISEASES, BORER AND WART

State Bureau Of Plant Industry Considers Ambitious Program For Year.

One of the most ambitious and comprehensive programs ever undertaken by the state bureau of plant industry is planned for this year. The work will include enforcement of quarantine regulations in territory infested with the Japanese beetle, corn borer and potato wart; study of control measures for overcoming plant diseases and eradicating insect pests through experimental tests with insecticides and fungicides; increased activity in seed inspection and seed analysis and a preliminary survey preparatory to a state-wide campaign for eradication of foul brood diseases among bees.

Five Classes

The work of the bureau is subdivided into five classes with experts, all under the general supervision of Dr. C. H. Hadley, chief of the bureau, in charge of each. These classes are known as insect work, plant disease, botany, nursery inspection and bee inspection. The year's work as outlined by bureau officials includes:

Insect work—Under this division comes all the activities in connection with the Japanese beetle, corn borer, Oriental fruit moth and Mexican bean beetle. Anticipating increased motor travel on account of the Philadelphia Sesqui-Centennial the quarantine on the Japanese beetle is to be enforced rigidly. While the quarantine against the corn borer will be enforced in northwestern Pennsylvania where the insect is found, the bureau plans an educational program showing the necessity of cleaning up corn crop remnants. Control measures for both the corn borer and Japanese beetle also will be studied.

Field studies of the Oriental fruit moth are to be continued and experimental control work is planned for the Chambersburg and Harrisburg districts. Scouting for traces of the Mexican bean beetle which appeared in gardens in the Western part of the state will be undertaken. Experiments with sprays for control of the pest will be conducted and a study of the beetle's life history probably will be started.

$58.62 REALIZED IN FLOWER SALE

Gettysburgians contributed $58.62 toward the erection of a memorial to the late Captain Henry H. Worthington, world war veteran, killed in action in France, and whose body is buried in the Gettysburg cemetery. The memorial will be erected in Lancaster.

The above amount contributed here toward the memorial fund was raised through the selling of flower boutonniers of local children, under the supervision of Miss S. Clara Taylor, Lancaster.

The first tag-day sale of the boutonniers was held February 27th, but due to inclement weather and lack of notification, only a few flowers were sold, amounting to $16.27. The first three prizes were awarded to Kenneth Hull, Harold Heiges and Martin Eckert. The children who sold flowers on that date were treated to candy by those directing the sale.

Last Saturday, Jacob Appler won the first prize of $3.00 when he sold $9.26 worth of flowers. Harold Heiges was awarded second prize, $2.00, for selling $7.84 worth of the boutonniers while the third prize of $1.00 was awarded to Richard Folkenroth, when he sold $4.30.

Miss Taylor expressed her appreciation of the borough and school officials and all others who assisted in any way in the tag-day sales.

840,000 PERSONS USED FORESTS OF STATE DURING '25

Many Hunters And Fishermen Included; Large Number Use Fire Towers.

The Pennsylvania department of forests and waters announces that during 1925 more than 840,000 people used the state forests. Secretary R. Y. Stuart in commenting upon this rapid increase in the number of users of state-owned forest land said that more people used the state forests in 1925 than in any year since the department has been keeping records.

Among the forest users were 185,150 hunters and 31,750 fishermen. More than 30,000 people used the forest fire observation towers in the state forests, and about 130,000 people enjoyed the out of doors in the state forest parks which have been developed during the last five years. The Caledonia State Forest Park, situated along the Lincoln Highway between Gettysburg and Chambersburg, stood first, with 50,000 visitors; the Mont Alto State Forest Park is second, with 25,000 visitors, and the Voneida State Forest Park located near Woodward in Centre county was third, with 20,000 visitors.

33 Public Camps

During the last five years 33 public camps have been developed on the state forests. These outdoor play places were visited by more than 115,000 people in 1925. They cover a total of 470 acres and have been set aside for the convenience and comfort of those who come to the forest for play and recreation. Secretary Stuart also reported that there are 1,500 permanent camp sites leases on the state forests. These small parcels of state forest are leased to individuals or organizations at a nominal rental of from $7.00 to $15.00 per year. Upon these camp sites have been erected many attractive cottages, cabins and camps in which thousands of people now enjoy leisure days and rest throughout the year. These rest places have been appropriately called forest life saving stations, and are unquestionably a big factor in promoting and maintaining the health of the citizens of the state. During 1925 more than 78,000 people enjoyed these special outdoor beauty spots.

Recently a special outdoor booklet was issued by the department. Its title is "In Penn's Woods." It is distributed free of charge by the department of forests and waters, Harrisburg, Pa. This handbook lists all the state forest parks, state forest monuments, public camps, and special scenic areas on the state forests. It also gives the state forest rules and contains many helpful suggestions on camping.

In a recent interview Secretary Stuart said:

"The state forests of Pennsylvania are the people's property for the people's use. They must be made to serve continuously the citizens of the state. Their resources must be developed and used to yield the greatest good to the greatest number."

ARREST MAN ON PRETENSE CHARGE

Lancaster Man Alleged to Have Secured Money From Bank by Giving False Title.

Alleged to have secured a total of $4,400 by discounting notes at an East Berlin bank and giving title to property which did not belong to him, according to the police, George M. Sides, 55, of Lancaster county, was arrested at Smyrna, Delaware, on a charge of false pretense.

Bail in the sum of $5,000 having been posted for his appearance at a preliminary hearing before Justice J. L. Hill, March 17, at 2 o'clock, Sides was released from custody.

According to Corporal S. S. Mollenkoff, of the local detail of the state police, who brought about Sides' arrest, the former Lancasterian secured money from the East Berlin bank on three different occasions, each time giving title to property in the vicinity of Quarryville, Lancaster county, as security for the notes.

Found In Delaware

The last occasion on which Sides is alleged to have secured funds from the bank was November 7. Afterward Sides is alleged by the police to have dropped from sight, and was only recently located working at Smyrna, Delaware.

A warrant for his arrest was telegraphed to Smyrna, and Sides was taken into custody. To police there, he expressed a willingness to return to Adams county to face the charge without the necessity of extradition proceedings.

The farm in Lancaster county is said by Corporal Mollenkoff to have been represented to the bank officials by Sides as his property, and to have a value approximating $20,000.

When the bank investigated, it was found, however, that the farm in Lancaster county, near Quarryville, was in the name of Sides' son, and to be worth only about $8,000, according to state police.

SUIT STARTED HERE AGAINST READING ROAD

Charging "careless and negligent action," Lloyd H. Stallsmith and his wife, Mrs. Eva Romaine Stallsmith, of York, have entered suit here for $7,500 against the Gettysburg and Harrisburg Railway Company.

The suit is the outgrowth of an accident at Bendersville Station, Aspers, July 19, 1925, when the Stallsmiths were en route to attend a funeral in the upper end of the county. The plaintiffs' statement of claim sets forth that Mr. Stallsmith, driver of the machine, started to cross the railroad tracks after having "slowed down, stopped, looked and listened and seeing nothing and hearing nothing."

The allegation of "careless and negligent action" against the railroad company is set forth in the statement of claim, in the following paragraphs:

Careless, Negligent

"That the said defendant, not regarding its duty in the premises then and there, by its servants, agents or employees, drove said locomotive and train of cars carelessly and negligently and with excessive speed and improper speed, and without blowing a whistle or ringing any bell, and without giving any warning whatsoever of the approach of its locomotive and train of cars to the crossing above referred to."

"That the defendant, prior to the time of the injury complained of herein, negligently and carelessly permitted a certain large freight car or cars to be placed upon its tracks at said grade crossing in such a way as to obstruct and shut off all view of an approaching train."

Stock Prices On Skyward Movement

(By Associated Press.)

New York, March 9.—An extension of yesterday's late short covering movement carried stock prices irregularly higher at the opening of today's market. General Electric declined four points and Atlantic Coast Line rallied three points. Indication that considerable of the floating supply of stocks had been absorbed on recent breaks was shown by the extent of the advances in many issues on light buying. Shorts were free buyers when the early drive against the motors and a handful of specialties broke down. Another selling movement in Chrysler at noon carried it down to 40 and one-fourth. Call money opened at four and one-fourth per cent.

His wife claims $4,000 damages for her incapacity to work and earn wages, permanent impairment of her health, pain, suffering and inconvenience. John P. Butt, who represents the Stallsmiths, today said he did not know whether the case would be set down for trial in April, and that if it is listed for trial then it is doubtful if the court will get to it, by reason of the fact that the April term is for one week only, and that criminal business is likely to consume most of the time.

Henry Morgenthau, former Ambassador to Turkey, investigating Philippine conditions, predicted trouble if the islands continue their independence campaign.

Professor Lloyd Keefeauver was a teacher in the state of Maryland when Professor Shank appointed him three years ago. If the past has any bearing on the present, being out of the county is in my favor.

I consider this nothing against a man but I feel that an explanation is my duty since it is being used against me.

PICK 8 JURORS IN MURDER TRIAL

Marshall Is Disturbed by Continued Absence of His Wife; Attorneys In Verbal Clashes.

(By Associated Press.)

Philadelphia, March 9.—Eight jurors were selected by early afternoon today in the trial of David L. Marshall, charged with murdering Miss Anna May Dietrich and dismembering her body.

Four men were selected for the jury box in the first day of the trial yesterday and when the panel of 52 was exhausted at noon today Judge Harry S. McDevitt ordered a new panel brought in for the afternoon session.

Frequent clashes between counsel featured the examination of the talesmen.

Mrs. Jennie Marshall, wife of the accused man, "is away under a physician's care," said her father, F. C. Kinsell, today.

"She cannot be disturbed for anything," he declared. It was suggested she might be instrumental in saving her husband's life as his attorney, Abraham Wernick, had said he depended on her as an important witness. "She cannot be disturbed," he reiterated.

The father-in-law was found in the grocery department of a department store through information furnished by Marshall.

"I think you will find him there," Marshall told his attorney. "I hope you do. I hope something will be done," Marshall added during a brief recess of the court to air the room.

Then the prisoner returned the disconsolate pose, head bowed, as he had most of the morning session. He entered the court room apparently in a cheerful mood, but the continued absence of his wife seemed to disturb him.

THIEF STEALS TIRES AND RIMS

Enters Garage Near Waynesboro and Takes Two Tires and Rims From Auto Truck.

Dairyman J. F. Neibert, residing near Waynesboro, was the victim of a bold theft perpetrated Sunday night of early Monday morning, when some culprit entered his garage, located thirty feet from the house, and removed and stole two tires and rims from the truck used by him in delivering milk. The theft was not discovered until 7:30 Monday morning when his son went to the garage to get out the truck preparatory to making his morning delivery of milk.

The thief evidently was poorly equipped for his mission as the tool box on the truck had been cracked evidently to secure tools with which to remove the tires and rims. Nothing else about the truck was tampered with. A touring car which was standing beside the truck was also untouched.

It is thought that the thief wanted the tires for use on his own car and for this reason did not bother the tires on the touring car, although they were in better condition. Had the thief wanted the tires to sell he would in all probability have taken all good tires in sight.

The robbery was especially bold inasmuch as it showed absolutely no evidence of hurry on the part of the culprit. There was no lock on the garage door. The thief entered the garage, broke open the tool box, jacked up the wheels, removed the tires and rims, and departed leaving the truck standing on the jacks. Evidence seemed to point to the fact that the robbery was the work of someone thoroughly acquainted with the scene of their activity. The police are working on the case.

9 KNOWN DEAD IN MINE BLAST

Eight More Bodies Recovered by Rescue Workers; 20 Others Still Entombed.

(By Associated Press.)

Eccles, West Va., March 9.—The known dead in the mine explosion here last night were increased to 9 today as rescue workers broke through a barrier of debris and found eight additional bodies near the bottom of the shaft of the Crab number 5 mine. Workers redoubled their efforts to press their way into the damaged workings hoping to find alive some of the 20 other miners who were entombed by the blast.

The body of the victim previously recovered was found in number 6 mine of the same company a quarter of a mile away into which gasses from the blast swept through a connecting passage. Nine other miners working in the number 6 pit escaped alive, although some of them were affected by the fumes.

The chief of the West Virginia Department of Mines, who is directing the battle through the blockade in the number 6 pit said today that the rescue workers hoped to find that some of the entombed men were able to take care of themselves by erecting makeshift protection against the gasses.

BARDELYS The Magnificent

by RAFAEL SABATINI

Published by arrangement with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Syndicate

AS IT HAS GONE

Forced into a wager by Count Chatterault that he would win and win the famed beauty Roxanne de Lavedan, Bardelys the Magnificent arrives at Lavedan badly wounded where, from papers found in his possession, it is assumed he is Lesperon, the rebel. Because the name of Bardelys is unpopular in the Lavedan household, Bardelys permits this deception, which he regrets on finding his great love for Roxanne, whose contempt he fears on disclosing his real identity. Mademoiselle de Marsac, betrothed to Lesperon, and her brother, having been advised by Chevalier de Saint-Eustache, whose enemy Bardelys has incurred, of Lesperon's presence at Lavedan, are enroute to see him. Bardelys has denied his betrothal to any woman and beseeches Roxanne to believe him. The de Marsacs on arrival learn of the identity of Lesperon. Incensed de Marsac leaves a letter to Lesperon threatening to kill him on sight. They hastily depart without seeing Bardelys and save him from exposure. The letter is delivered to Bardelys.

It is because of this (the letter proceeded) that I have refrained from coming face to face with you this morning. The times are too troublous and the province is in too dangerous a condition to admit of an act that might draw the eyes of the Keeper of the Seas upon Lavedan. To my respect, then, to Monsieur le Vicomte and to my own devotion to the Cause we mutually served you once it that you

But in my passion I held her, despite entreaties, threats, and struggles, still here. I am on my way to Spain to seek shelter there from the King's vengeance.

To save myself is a duty that I owe as much to myself as to the cause. But there is another duty, one that I owe my sister, whom you have so outrageously slighted, and this duty, by God's grace, I will perform before I leave. Of your honour, monsieur, we will not speak, for reasons into which I need not enter, and I make no appeal to it. But if you have a spark of manhood left, if you are not an utter craven as well as a knave, I shall expect you on the day after tomorrow, at any hour before noon, at the Auberge de la Couronne at Grenade. There, monsieur, if you please, we will adjudge our differences. That you may come prepared, so that no time need be wasted when we meet, I send you the length of my sword.

Thus ended that angry, fire-breathing episode. I refolded it thoughtfully, then, having taken my resolve, I leaped from the bed and desired Anatole to assist me to dress.

I found the Vicomte much exercised in mind as to the meaning of Marsac's extraordinary behaviour, and I was relieved to see that he, at least, could conjecture no cause for it. In reply to the questions with which he very naturally assailed me, I assured him that it was no more than a matter of a misunderstanding; that Monsieur de Marsac had asked me to meet him at Grenade in two days' time, and that I should then, no doubt, be able to make all clear.

From what Anatole had said, I had already concluded that Marsac had exercised the greatest reluctance. But the interview between his sister and Roxanne filled me with the gravest anxiety. Women are not wont to practise the restraint of men under such circumstances, and for all that Mademoiselle de Marsac may not have expressed it in so many words that I was her faithless lover, yet women are quick to detect and interpret the signs of disorders springing from such causes, and I had every fear that Roxanne was come to the conclusion that I had lied to her yesterday. With an uneasy spirit, then, I went in quest of her, and I found her walking in the old rose garden behind the chateau.

She did not at first remark my approach, and I had leisure for some moments to observe her and to note the sadness that dwelt in her profile and the listlessness of her movements. This, then, was my work—mine, and that of Monsieur de Chatterault, and those other merry gentlemen who had sat at my table in Paris high upon a month ago.

I moved, and the gravel crunched under my foot, whereupon she turned, and, at sight of me advancing towards her, she started. The blood mounted to her face, to ebb again upon the instant, leaving it paler than it had been. She made as if to depart; then she appeared to check herself, and stood immovable and outwardly calm, awaiting my approach.

But her eyes were averted, and her bosom rose and fell too swiftly to lead colour to that mask of indifference she hurriedly put on. Yet, as I drew nigh, she was the first to speak, and the triviality of her words came as a shock to me and—for all my knowledge of women's ways—caused me to doubt for a moment whether perhaps her calm were not real, after all.

"You are a laggard this morning, Monsieur de Lesperon." And with a half laugh, she turned aside to break a rose from its stem.

"True," I answered stupidly; "I slept overlate."

"A thousand pities, since thus you missed seeing Mademoiselle de Marsac. Have they told you that she was here?"

"Yes, mademoiselle, Stanislas de Marsac left a letter for me."

"You will regret not having seen them, no doubt?" quoth she.

I evaded the interrogative note in her voice. "That is their fault. They appear to have preferred to avoid me."

"Is it a matter for wonder?" she flashed, with a sudden gleam of fury which she as suddenly controlled. With the old indifference, she added, "You do not seem perturbed, monsieur?"

"On the contrary, mademoiselle, I am very deeply perturbed."

"At not having seen your betrothed?" she asked, and now for the first time her eyes were raised, and they met mine with a look that was a stab.

"Mademoiselle, I had the honour of telling you yesterday that I had pledged my troth to no living woman."

At that reminder of yesterday she winced, and I was sorry that I had uttered it, for it must have set the wound in her pride a bleeding again. Yesterday I had as much as told her that I loved her, and yesterday she had as much as answered me that she loved me, for yesterday I had sworn that Saint-Eustache's story of my betrothal was a lie. To-day she had had assurance of the truth from the very woman to whom Lesperon's faith was pledged, and I could imagine something of her shame.

"Yesterday, Monsieur," she answered contemptuously, "you lied in many things."

"Nay, I spoke the truth in all. Oh, God in heaven, mademoiselle, I exclaimed in sudden passion, "will you not believe me? Will you not accept my word for what I say, and have a little patience until I shall have discharged such obligations as will permit me to explain?"

"Explain?" quoth she, with withering disdain.

"There is a hideous misunderstanding in all this. I am the victim of a miserable chain of circumstances. Oh, I can say no more! These Marsacs I shall easily pacify. I am to meet Monsieur de Marsac at Grenade on the day after tomorrow. In my pocket I have a letter from this living sword-blade, in which he tells me that he will give himself the pleasure of killing me then. Yet—" "I hope he does, monsieur!" she cut in, with a fierceness before which I felt dumb and left my sentence unfinished. "I shall pray God that he may!" she added. "You deserve it as no man deserved it yet!"

For a moment I stood stricken, indeed, by her words. Then, my reason grasping the motive of that fierceness, a sudden joy pervaded me. It was a fierceness breathing that hatred that is a part of love, than which, it is true, no hatred can be more deadly. And yet so eloquently did it tell me of those very feelings which she sought jealously to conceal, that moved by a sudden impulse, I stepped close up to her.

"Roxanne," I said fervently, "you do not hope for it. What would your life be if I were dead? Child, child, you love me even as I love you." I caught her suddenly to me with infinite tenderness, with reverence almost. "Can you lend me ear to the voice of this love? Can you not have faith in me a little? Can you not think that if I were quite as unworthy as you make-believe to your very self, this love could have no place?"

"It has no place!" she cried.

"You lie—as in all things else. I do not love you. I hate you. Die! How I hate you!"

She had lain in my arms until then, with upturned face and piteous, frightened eyes—like a bird that feels itself within the coils of a snake, yet whose horror is blent with a certain fascination. Now, as she spoke, her will seemed to reassert itself, and she struggled to break from me. But as her fierceness of hatred grew, so did my fierceness of resolve gain strength, and I held her tightly.

"Why do you hate me?" I asked steadily. "Ask yourself, Roxanne, and tell me what answer your heart makes. Does it not answer that indeed you do not hate me—that you love me?"

"Oh, God, to be so insulted!" she cried out. "Will you not release me, miserable? Must I call for help? Oh, you shall suffer for this! As there is a Heaven, you shall be punished!"

But in my passion I held her, despite entreaties, threats, and struggles. I was brutal, if you will. Yet think of what was in my soul at being so misjudged, at finding myself in this position, and deal not over-harshly with me. The courage to confess which I had lacked for days, came to me then. I must tell her. Let the result be what it might, it could not be worse than this, and this I could endure no longer.

"Listen, Roxanne!"

"I will not listen! Enough of insults have I heard already. Let me go!"

"Nay, but you shall hear me. I am not Rene de Lesperon. Had these Marsacs been less impetuous and foolish, had they waited to have seen me this morning, they would have told you so."

She paused for a second in her struggles to regard me. Then, with a sudden contemptuous laugh, she renewed her efforts more vigorously than before.

"What fresh lies do you offer me? Release me; I will hear no more!"

"As Heaven is my witness, I have told you the truth. I know how wild a sound it has, and that is partly why I did not tell you earlier. But your disdain I cannot suffer. That you should deem me a liar in professing to love you—"

Her struggles were grown so frantic that I was forced to relax my grip. But this I did with a suddenness that threw her out of balance, and she was in danger of falling backwards. To save herself, she caught at my doublet, which was torn open under the strain.

We stood some few feet apart, and, white and palpitating in her anger, she confronted me. Her eyes flashed with their scorn, but under my steady, unflinching gaze they fell at last. When next she raised them there was a smile of quiet but unutterable contempt upon her lips.

"Will you swear," she said, "that you are not Rene de Lesperon?" That Mademoiselle de Marsac is not your betrothed?"

"Yes—by my very hope of Heaven!" I cried passionately.

She continued to survey me with that quiet smile of mocking scorn. "I have heard it said," quoth she, "that the greatest liars are ever those that are readiest to take oath." Then, with a sudden gasp of loathing, "I think you have dropped something, monsieur," said she, pointing to the ground. And without waiting for more, she swung round and left me.

LAUDS PLANK AS GREAT SOUTHPAW

Grantland Rice Declares Late Hurier "Doesn't Come Far From Being the Greatest."

Grantland Rice, editor of a copy-righted article "The Spotlight" appearing in many newspapers in the country this morning, lauds Eddie Plank as one who "doesn't come far from rating as the greatest of all the left-handers." Rice's article follows: "EDDIE PLANK'S RATING"

"Eddie Plank doesn't come far from rating as the greatest of all the left-handers. "Waddell and others had more brilliant strike-out days, but the Gettysburg Guide, as Charley Dryden called him, was a winning star for 17 years. "Plank had about as fine an average in the way of earned runs allowed as any start on the record books for that much service. He was rarely hit hard and for general steadiness he had no equal."

"He was much harder for the Giants in the World Series of 1913 than he was in the World Series of 1905, and in that first New York test only the brilliancy of Mathewson brought him defeat. He won nearly 65 per cent of his starts for 17 years, and that comes close to being a pennant-winning average for each campaign."

"From 1904 through 1914 Connie Mack at one time or another carried four of baseball's greatest pitchers. They were Plank, Bender, Waddell and Coombs. Plank, Bender and Waddell helped to win the pennant of 1905. Plank, Bender and Coombs were big factors in the pennant campaigns of 1910, 1911, 1913 and 1914. Connie had three great pitchers working through these years, and the two who gave him longer service were Bender and Plank."

INSPECTOR RAPS JAIL IN READING

Reading, March 9.—Declaring there was more disloyalty among employees of the jail than among the prisoners themselves; that religious services held in the city prison were a joke because no place for them was available, and that it was costing $53,000 to run the prison when it should cost no more than $30,000 a year, Charles T. Davies, a prison inspector, attacked the entire system Monday in an address to the Welfare Federation.

The meeting was called for the purpose of considering support for families of men in jail.

"The jail is no better than the men who run the jail," said Mr. Davies, who was introduced by Mrs. Max Mittenhoff, chairman of the family division of the federation. Speaking about what he termed the lack of interest among the taxpayers and relatives of prisoners, Mr. Davies continued: "It's your fault that the jail is the way it is. If a man who is sent to jail is no better when he comes out than when he went in he is not punished."

Unless you bear with the faults of a friend, you betray your own.

Just Folks

READING TO A LITTLE GIRL

Reading to a little girl,
Well, I'll tell you, there's a chore!
Nursery rhymes, a thousand times
I have read them o'er and o'er.
Here and there and everywhere
Following the little bear.

Peter Rabbit, line by line,
I have read it from the start,
Fast and slow, till we know
Every word of it by heart.

Still she climbs upon my knee,
Pleading, "Read this book to me."
Fairy stories, old and new,
Hour by hour I've sat and read,
Worn with age, and torn the page,
Stained with jam and buttered bread,
But she loves them, and she knows
Just how every story goes.

Mother reads until she's tired,
Then she packs her off to me.
When I doze, straight back she goes
With the book to mother's knee.
Here, I'd tell you, should you ask,
Is a never-ending task.

IN MEMORIAM

In sad but loving remembrance of our dear little son, Fred R. Kump, who departed this life one year ago, March 7, 1925.

One year ago our darling left us, Left us, yes, forever more, But we hope to meet our loved one, On the bright and happy shore.

Lonely the day and sad the hours, Since our dear one has gone, It was God's wish, So He took from us our boy.

Dear little one, we miss you so, All through the day wherever we go, He has gone where the angels are, Oh, may we meet with God above, And join once more together. By his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kump.

Thousands of sufferers have freed themselves from the bondage of rheumatism; rid themselves of the torturing pain; reduced the swollen joints; thrown away canes and crutches, and from helpless beings became able to work and be of use to themselves and their families.

They took Rheuma: the modern enemy of rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, arthritis, and chronic neuralgia.

Don't be skeptical about Rheuma. You will know in a few hours after beginning the treatment that the poisonous waste matter is leaving your system through the natural channels. You will feel better in a day; you will know you are going to be helped in less than a week.

There is no guess work about Rheuma bringing you back to health. That's why People's Drug Store and druggists everywhere sell it with guarantee of money back if it does not give quick relief. Adv.

Safety First! with Conkey's

Conkey's (the original) Buttermilk Starting Feed prevents the big losses due to weakness and disease and gives your chicks the quick, snappy getaway that produces early broilers and layers. The lactic acid in the buttermilk puts an edge to the appetite; strengthens and tones up the sensitive digestive organs, and helps to sweep away the germs that cause White Diarrhea.

Be Sure to Get Conkey's in the original packages—2½, 5, 10, 25 and 100 lb. packages. Don't accept a substitute—it's dangerous.

The Critical First 8 Weeks of Chick Life

Semi-Solid Buttermilk No Dried Buttermilk

In Conkey's Buttermilk Starting Feed, we use Semi-Solid Buttermilk only, according to the Original and successful Conkey process.

It is the most successful feed for little chicks from 48 hours to 8 weeks of age. Start them right with Conkey's and you can have 3-lb. pullets at 12 weeks of age.
